

Templates, Planners & Contracts for Differently Wired Kids

SCHOOL LIFE & HOMESCHOOLING

School Life / Homeschooling

Daily School Goal Sheet: Asher fills out a worksheet like this every morning so he can check in on what his “to do's” are for every class and create a list of goals for the day. He also numbers the goals / tasks to put them in the order in which he wants to do them. He fills this out while looking at his Goals of the Week.

Attention! (late to school #1): My response to Asher being late / not showing up for our homeschool, designed to both set a boundary for myself and also help him self-reflect and take responsibility for his actions.

Uh Oh...Looks Like it Happened Again (late to school #2): See above

Yikes...Your Plan Didn't Work (late to school #3): See above

ATTENTION!

School begins at 10:10am. If this door is closed, it is because you are very late to school.

We have several guidelines for our wonderful homeschool that we created together, which include treating each other with respect. One of the best ways to show respect is to respect each other's time and keep our word with regards to the starting time of school.

In order for school to resume, please answer the following questions thoughtfully and deliver this form to me:

- 1. How is being late to school disrespectful?
- 2. Do you think it is reasonable to expect your teacher / mom to wait for an undetermined amount of time each morning while you continue to work on whatever you're doing? Why or why not?
- 3. What can you do differently tomorrow to be on time for school?
- 4. What restitution can you do TODAY, either for your teacher/ mom or your school, to make up for the late start this morning?

UH OH... LOOKS LIKE IT'S HAPPENED AGAIN

You're late to school ☹

One of our most important guidelines for our homeschool is that we treat each other with respect, which includes respecting each other's time and our agreed upon start of school.

As your mother and teacher, when you yell at me as I let you know it's time to get ready for school, I feel disrespected and hurt.

In order for school to resume, please answer the following questions thoughtfully and deliver this form to me:

- 1. Why do you think you have been struggling to get off the computer the past few mornings before school?
- 2. I've noticed you've been getting very upset lately during your screen time. Do you think you can make a different choice with how you're spending your screen time so you don't get so upset?
- 3. What could you do differently in the mornings to a) help yourself not get so upset, and b) be on time for school?
- 4. What restitution can you do today, either for your teacher / mom / or for your school, to make up for the late start this morning?

YIKES...LOOKS LIKE YOUR PLAN DIDN'T WORK

You're late to school again. ☹️

When you are repeatedly late for school, it feels super icky and as if you don't respect me or our time together. It's also just plain not okay. It's not how I want our school to work. How about you?

In order for school to resume, please answer the following questions thoughtfully and deliver this form to me:

1. Why do you think your plan for a smooth morning didn't work today?
2. Where did things go wrong / what decision did you make that resulted in things going off track?
3. What specifically could you have done differently this morning to ensure you were at school on time?
4. What restitution can you do today, either for me (your mom) or for your school, to make up for the late start?